

October 24, 2015

I am very happy to write in support of Dr. Eilon Caspi and his new Dementia Behavior Consulting Company. I have known Eilon for several years and have worked closely with him on a variety of volunteer activities including an Act on Alzheimer's Twin Cities Jewish Community Task Force co-chaired by Annette Sandler and Chris Rosenthal and Family Advisory Council of HealthPartners Memory and Aging Center chaired by Dr. Michael Rosenbloom. I have also heard Dr. Caspi at several of his presentations helping people to better understand and be more effective in caring for people with dementia and I know of the accolades he has received working with others to organize effective conferences on this complex subject.

I cannot think of a better person to offer dementia behavior consulting. Dr. Caspi's education, experience, and above all, his natural intrinsic behavior of caring for the well-being of people, and specifically his regard for people with dementia, recognizing the importance of effective engagement to convey value and hope in their lives, and helping caregivers to do the same will result in outstanding opportunities and benefits for people in need of his expertise.

Sumner Richman, PhD
Emeritus Professor of Biology &

Caregiver for his wife who is in a late stage of Alzheimer's disease